Dragons / dragonkin / related dragon-based races worship their ancestors of note:

- Anushka - A great gold dragon that won many battles
- Genessa - A great green dragon who championed peace and understanding, reveling in knowledge and wisdom.
- Farukh - A great black dragon that revered death and the afterlife, who always said a blessing over his defeated enemies.
- It is worth noting that recent discovery of a Lastlight Gem revealed memories of a fallen dragonkin at a great battle thousands of years ago, in which the three dragon gods ascended from mortality into deity as they supplanted a great white dragon and a great silver dragon. The party has not yet learned the full story behind the battle or the names of these two dragons.

The New Gods

Azrael - once a powerful warlock, whose patron betrayed him and caused him to lose his mother twice as a younger man. He shunned his patron, who revoked his powers. Somewhere along the way, he met a mysterious witch who taught him to harness magic Not of the Gods - from a source that seems to be anything but good or natural. The rest of his story is largely unknown up until the Cataclysm, when he appeared on the scene to banish a giant void creature that likely would have ended life in Moria altogether. Many celebrated him as a legendary hero, and due to his many other magical acts of heroism, he is considered to be revered as a deity that many devoted followers worship. His influence is strong in commerce, law enforcement, government, and emergency services.

Hamish (Unaffiliated) - A grey elf master chef who lives in Anastasia, Lyria, makes food that is said to give the consumer "experience a heavenly paradise" when consumed on premises in his restaurant affectionately dubbed "The Temple" in Common. Many people pay tribute while visiting Lyria, and the locals sustain his practice with patronage and ask for his blessings with altars in their kitchens at home.
